LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

A VISIT FROM MOTHER
Charles' intimation that it was cowardice that made me plan to go back to my husband as soon as I felt physically fit set me to analyzing my true feelings about John.

I pondered the matter a long time before I went to sleep last night and I know now that I do not hate John. I know this, alas, better than ever before. Since I have been down here alone, I have wanted, oh, God, how I have wanted to feel his arms about me, to look up into his eyes and know again that he wanted me. I love John but I do not like him; he is my lover, but not my friend; he is my husband and still a stranger. Just to remember how he says "girl, girl," thrills me to my finger tips, but my whole being rises up in revolt as I think of his arrogance and selfishness. Between us there exists the eternal chord which is the great tragedy, as well as the great attraction of the sexes.

Perhaps the Best Part
Arnold Bennett said in an essay on women: "Who wants the sex discord to be resolved? The sex discord may be the most exasperating thing in existence, but it is also by general agreement the most delightful and the most interesting. Its development for the devilish adventurousness of mankind is a part of the great search for truth—and perhaps the best part."

"If men and women were to wake up one morning in perfect and mutual comprehension, and in the assurance that no discord separated them on that day, the sun—where it had shone—would shine in vain. The globe would have to put up its shutters, the sublime adventure would be over and the great first cause would have to beguile men and women within its snare."

There you have a man's opinion, and I do not agree with him. Women do not want to live in discord even if it makes "the great adventure."

We poor, mistaken mortals are always longing for perfection, for unalloyed happiness, but having obtained it, would we not be discontented because in the universe of emotion there would be no more worlds to conquer? However, I am quite sure I could stand a little more happiness than I have been having lately. I do not want more night than day in my life. My hours of ecstasy since my marriage have been few and far between, and I am rapidly reaching that place where like Helen, I am almost ready "to take my happiness where I find it."

Grown Away From Teachings
As I sit with these thoughts coursing through my mind I shudder a little to find how far away I have grown from my mother's teachings.

What am I going to do with my little mother, I hate to be untruthful to her, and yet I am sure that if she looks into my heart she will be horrified as well as unhappy. Her life with my father seemed one of perfect bliss. And there, such perfectly happy marriages, I wondered, "I'm going to ask mother if she ever felt the pang of discord among the strings of her life. Was her life with my father always 'one grand, sweet song'?"

So busy was I thinking of this that I did not finish Charles' letter. When I read further I noted that they were one minute. The letter had been delayed in the mails. I still had it in my hand when my telephone rang and the girl announced my mother and Charles. I felt that I was not ready to meet them, I had not yet decided on what I should tell or what I should not tell my mother. And above all else regretted having Charles see that I was not happily married. I was afraid that it would bring about again a declaration from him.

Waiting Outside for Me
All my life I had realized that he was waiting—waiting just outside for me.

I was shocked when I saw my mother. She had faded visibly since I was home at the time of father's funeral. She looked so small and white. I was more than ever sure that Charles had made a mistake in bringing her when I literally picked her up in my arms and found my burden so tiny, so light that I felt as though I were holding a child.

Dorothy Dix Talks

MARRY IN YOUR OWN CLASS

By DOROTHY DIX, the World's Highest Paid Woman Writer

According to the Paris newspapers there is a continuous migration home-ward of the French women who married American army officers and soldiers. Most of these disillusioned war brides are said to be returning not because of personal differences with their husbands, but because of their inability to adapt themselves to the American mode of living, and American customs and habits.

This is only what was to be expected. International marriages are very seldom a success even in those cases in which the bride has millions with which to atone to her husband for her being different from the women of his own race, and the husband can give his wife a coronet as a compensation for leaving home, and friends, and family. In the long list of so-called brilliant marriages which American girls have made with foreign noblemen there has scarcely been one instance of a happy marriage.

Neither Money Nor Position.
How much less chance of success then had these marriages between poor men and poor girls who have neither money nor position to gild their lot? Nothing but blindness of love could have made anyone believe that they could be happy. And the trouble with the blindness of love is that it is always a temporary complaint. Time invariably cures it.

The only chance that an international marriage has of being happy is when the man settles down to live in the woman's country, for men can be transplanted much more easily than women can. The love of place is indeed in their very souls. Also family ties are much stronger with them than with men; and so one can have only pity for these poor, homeless brides whose love for their Sammys was not strong enough to enable them to endure an alien country, and an alien people, whose customs and ways were strange to them, and whose language they did not speak.

International Marriages Not Happy.
As a matter of fact marriages between people of different races and different religions very seldom turn out well. Nor is this strange. No matter how much a man and woman really love each other the process of adjustment to each other is a difficult one, even when they have a common background, and pretty much the same point of view.

This is infinitely complicated when they thrust in difference in racial temperament, different habits, and customs, so diametrically opposite way of looking at things, a different God, and a different theology.

How could you expect Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic to harmonize? How could you expect an austere, puritanical New Englander to get along in peace with a volatile Latin with quicksilver in her veins? What congeniality would there be between an exotic Russian and a plain practical American business man? How could you transplant a Parisian elegant to a little mid-west village and really give her a heart interest in the sewing circle and the missionary meeting?

And the answer is, you can't. It is one of the impossibilities, and so the man who marries out of his own country, and out of his own circle, and his own religion, does well to adopt his wife's at once. It is the only thing that saves the situation.

Life is the wise man, however, who seeks a wife among his own people and of his own faith. She will be wholesome bread and butter to him while the strange woman will always be caviare, and while caviare is a most alluring appetizer we soon acquire indigestion if we attempt to make a meal upon it. Also a steady diet of it soon pall upon our appetites and we lose our relish for it.

Nothing in life is crueler than the law of the attraction of opposites that draws men and women irresistibly and fatally towards those who are their opposite in every respect, and with whom they will be miserable if they mate. This is nature's way of preserving the general average of the species, and to keep humanity from degenerating into groups of giants and pygmies, of angels and devils, of super-intellectuals and fools.

People Drawn by Opposites.
For the very quality of oppositeness that draws a man and woman together before marriage, makes them apart after marriage. They never understand each other because they have no meeting ground of mutual temptation and weakness. To the self-controlled man, for instance, the emotional woman who flies into tempers, and repents, and weeps is a repulsive weakness. About the only thing they have in common is the perpetual wonder of why they ever married each other.

The happy marriages are those in which people marry the same kind of folk as they are, those who have been reared in the same environment, who have had the same education, who have the same friends and are used to the same kind of cooking, and pie and politics, and the same brand of religion. Squeedunk is just as fascinating a place to live in as New York or London, or Paris if you have always lived there, but it's a little flat to be brought to it as a bride if you have spent your life on Broadway, or the Rue de la Paix or in Belgrade.

A new suit from a mail order house may make you a leader in fashion just as much as the latest import from Paris. It is just as thrilling to help your husband build up a green grocery trade as it is to pull the wires that make him an ambassador. It all depends on what you are used to. But you cannot pass from diplomatic circles and French models to the green grocery and the hand-me-down without a jar that is apt to shatter the family circle.

No better advice was ever given to the man about to marry than Longfellow offered when he said, "Like the starlight, like the moonlight is the hardest of strangers, like the fire upon the hearthstone is a neighbor's home" daughter.

NO NEW WARSHIPS

WILL BE ORDERED

Appropriations for War Vessels, Giant Seaplanes and Big Dirigible Refused

WASHINGTON, March 17.—No new warship construction is authorized in the annual naval appropriation bill as ordered favorably reported yesterday by the house naval committee. Requests for appropriations for building two giant seaplanes, twice the size of the trans-Atlantic NC-4 and a mammoth dirigible also were refused. The measure carries a total of $124,450,000, or $200,000,000 less than the last appropriation bill.

The only funds for construction approved by the committee was $14,000,000 for continuing work on the unfinished 1918 program.

Although the permanent authorized strength of the navy is 143,000 men, the committee provided pay on a basis of an average force of 120,000 for the next year.

For repairs on the vessels the committee provided approximately $60,000,000; for provisions $27,000,000; for fuel $10,000,000.

The appropriation for aviation was $15,800,000, including authorization for small seaplanes and dirigibles and for the establishment of six aviation bases in the continental United States, on sites to be selected later.

Dog Causes Great Scene at Postoffice

Yelps of canine anguish smote against postoffice patrons' eardrums with piercing intensity shortly after 2 o'clock. Women and men turned fearfully, expecting to see a dog in the next stage of rabies. Many hurried to leave the lobby of the postoffice.

Their fears were without foundation, however, and the dog had a perfectly good cause to yelp. He had caught his tail between the revolving door and the wall in which the cage revolves. Though the tail was kinked, it was not severely damaged.

BEAR LAKE COUNTY URGES OPENING OF NEW ROAD

J. P. Martin has reported the proceedings of a meeting of Bear Lake county commissioners, held at Paris, Idaho, yesterday. Mr. Martin attended the meeting to see if some other route than Montpelier canyon could be found for a spur track, planned by a company in Bear Lake county as a means of opening vast phosphate deposits in that part of the country.

Mr. Martin stated that nearly 100 square miles of phosphate deposits, running very high in phosphate percentage, lay approximately a mile from Montpelier. The company plans building a spur track connecting with the Oregon Short Line, of about 6 miles length. This track will probably be installed on the south side of Montpelier canyon, the road which is being built by the forest service and the Bear Lake county, being on the north side of the canyon.

He stated that a refining plant for phosphate had been erected and that other phosphate deposits in the vicinity had been opened up.

Kidneys Cause Hysteria

Some folks overwork; some overeat; some over drink, and many do all these things and neglect the excretory organs. Nervousness ensues. Constipation sometimes, but most often the delicate function of the kidneys become disordered, followed soon by congestion. Then headache, neuralgia, rheumatic pain, backache, and lumbago set in. Frequent urination sometimes beyond control. The voided liquid being dark and foetid odor, and its passage followed by burning, smarting spasms of pain, even hysteria being often the results unless
